Market Recap Thursday, November 22, 2012

Today's Commentary

Markets remained positive for the fourth straight trading day on Wednesday, as the DOW and S&P 500 gained 0.38% and 0.23% respectively, while the TSX was up 0.45%. This marks the biggest four-day winning streak the S&P 500 has seen in four months, although it is still trading below its pre-election highs. The TSX hit its one-week high thanks to strong performance from the financials sector, which reports earnings over the next two weeks, beginning with RBC on November 29

The Japanese yen is trading near seven-month lows as the country approaches a general election on December 16. The opposition party is advocating for "unlimited" monetary easing, which brings to mind Bernanke's policy on the other side of the Pacific. Japanese exports have suffered from an exceptionally strong yen in recent years, but at the same time, the country has become increasingly dependent on energy imports oweing to diminished nuclear output following the Fukushima disaster. This will make monetary policy in Japan a very delicate and complicated issue going forward.

Chinese stocks rose on the HSBC PMI number, which came in at 50.4 putting it in in expansionary territory and suggesting that manufacturing there is recovering. This follows several positive data points in the previous months and many investors feel that the world's second biggest economy is recovering from its slowdown. The Hang Seng and S&P/ASX were both up 1%.
